Before you go and brag to your friends about the success and awesome sex life you're about to have let me tell you about another testosterone killer endangering your manhood.

Today 92% of people suffer from a mineral imbalance or deficiency, causing your body to lack the raw material vital to produce testosterone.

Proper nutrition is the building block of your hormonal and overall health.

Unfortunately America's depleted soils don't provide you with the right vitamins and minerals for you to have enough testosterone to kill it in your job and have hot chicks dropping at your feet.

In fact today spinach has actually 10 times LESS nutrients than 50 years ago...

And according to The Kushi Institute of Becket, Massachusetts nowadays the average level of calcium, iron, zinc and vitamin A –all essential for T production– have dropped up to 100%

All the Micky Dees, Burger Kings and over processed foods don't help either depriving your body from all the nutrients it needs which means your testosterone will for sure take a hit!

So even if you eat right... you still won't go from wimp to ripped simply because your body lacks what it needs to produce T, put on lean body mass and maintain your health.

To produce Testosterone your body must have Vitamin A it increases libido, helps the formation of testosterone, sperm production and maintains the testicular tissue.

According to the Weston A. Price Foundation. Vitamin A not only increases testosterone but it actually helps lower estrogen production in male's testes.

Vitamin E, also known as the "sex vitamin". Besides stimulating the formation testosterone, helps blood circulation allowing your blood to flow adequately in the genital area so Mr. Magic Wand will always be up to perform its magic.

Vitamin B5 also plays a huge role in the formation of testosterone. Helps the body fight stress which as you know is a testosterone killer and it also increases your overall physical endurance.

And last but certainly not least Zinc, helps maintain normal hormonal levels. Zinc is a vital component of testosterone production, without it it's impossible for your body to produce it.

If your Zinc levels are low the pituitary gland is not able to release Testosterone.

Now, I have awesome news for you today...
